“ I was just out of high school when Mr. Glenn came to work at Jantzen. The first time he came to work on my single needle machine he threw his tools at me and said, "What's your Daddy's name?" Well I told him and he proceeded to work on my machine without a word who he might be. I was young and shy. It took me forever to find out that he was grandson to Mr. Paul Murphy who was a neighbor and had supplied us with many "Murphy Taters". I really didn't know until I got to be a teenager that sweet potatoes were not Murphy Taters. I enjoyed it when Mr. Glenn came to work on my sewing machine. We had much to talk about and share. Blessings to his wife and children.
