My brother, Greg, was so kind to me this fall when I was able to visit with him often. There was a relaxing and peaceful aura of late that surrounded him especially in his home that made me not to want to leave. I miss him dearly and his Christmas lights. I also miss sharing the playoffs of Clemson football as he was a true supporter. He shared with me his love for his two beautiful children and grandchildren, family and faith. He reminisced about the years he visited and lived with me in Charleston and Kiawah Island. He loved golf and was an avid coin and cigar authority. We discussed the latest movies playing and his graduation for high school where he played quarterback.

He would visit me for many years for the South Eastern Wildlife festivities in February. He loved going out on the boat down the Kiawah or Edisto River and the Atlantic. Greg love Low Country Shrimp Boil that we had recently.

I had found some great pictures especially in the 80's where he was so good lucking and brown as a berry after living at the beach I often told him he was the best looking one of the three growing up with that mustache.

Heaven was patiently waiting for him to come home to a beautiful place and home as he deserved one with love ones and family. The angels were waiting on him after his heart attack to guide him safely home with his silver cross. I set him free the last time I saw him in the hospital by asking him to find the light and go to it and leave his pain behind and eventually he was able to. He often gave of the little he had and we should all be most humbled to have known him.

His favorite blessing to me as that he gifted to me was a Catholic Cross that read...: If someone who has worldly means sees a brother in need and refuses his compassion, how can the love of God remain in him? Children, let us love not in word or speech but in DEED and TRUTH. Greg told me that I could have the cross as long as I wore it so he slipped it on my diamond Tiffany necklace before Christmas.

Many times he was my friend and driver to Emory hospital and I appreciated his thoughtfulness for others. I noticed now many organizations he gave to especially my favorite , The Indian children that sales light soft blankets. He was well read with 2 papers daily. and lovely assorted magazines like, Time, USA today to cooking and sporting magazines.

Greg was very talented and put together my gas grill or hang up a ceiling fan perfectly. He could run my electrical work in a minute for my stereo and big screen TV's. Greg was the middle son but had the biggest heart of us all of late. I am so happy I got to share with him daily this fall while visiting and catching up from the fun beach days. I will always miss You my sweet little brother and will see you again soon in heaven. Love and miss you, SIS
