“ A good Father, and Friend, that taught us good moral values, and to be there for each other. He was always there for us anytime of the day or night. He helped people, not expecting anything in return. I remember him stopping on the side of the road to help people fix there broken down car or truck. He would go buy parts and fix it no charge to them. He would just say if you have anymore trouble it, call me. I will try to fix it. I remember him buying turkeys at thanksgiving for families. I remember at Christmas him buying Christmas gifts for children that didn't have fathers and buying cloths for children when school started back. I remember so many good things about him. But, What I remember most about him was, when he was dying of cancer he was more concerned of others than himself. Telling us to take care of each other, because he would no longer be here. I remember him smoking and I hated the smoke and smell, but after he passed, all I wanted was a pack of his Cigarettes, because it smelt like him.
